Personal statement of research and practice goals

Dr. Gaskin's research focuses primarily on three areas – disparities in hospital quality, healthcare, and cardiovascular disease risk factors. His contribution to this literature is identifying and understanding the roles of place and contextual factors on the disparities. Dr. Gaskin approaches this issue from an economic perspective highlighting the importance role of community-level demand and supply side market forces on creating health and healthcare disparities. Ultimately, he hopes his research will encourage policymakers to move beyond the patient-provider dyad and support market and other community-level interventions to address disparities.

In addition to his research on understanding market and community level factor on disparities, Dr. Gaskin desires to have major impact of federal and state policymakers' decision to fund efforts to reduce health and healthcare disparities. His work applying costs of illness study techniques to health disparities has helped advocates make the case to reluctant policymakers that ignoring health disparities is costly to society. He seeks to work with advocacy organizations and policymakers to improve access and quality of care for vulnerable populations.
